ORGANIZED THIEVES.
A GANG OF MALES AND FEMALES WHO WORK THE LARGE HOTELS.
Camels Hair Blankets, Linen Shirts, Empty Purser, Sealskin Caps and Overcoats Found by the Police.

CHICAGO, March 14.—A few days ago an order was given at north and west station that a detective was wanted, named Kelly, at No. 12 Rosebud street. Officers Kelly and Spierling were summoned and after some search they found the right number in a little back alley, which is named inappropriately. The number was one of a long row of cheap subrick tenements. In a large rear room, on the second floor, they found a strange woman. She was seated in a broken rocking chair with a scantily clothed baby in her arms, and a little boy about 5 years of age, with a very ragged jacket on, standing by her side. These men was very good-looking and chose her words as carefully as a college professor. In a few words she explained that there existed in Chicago an organized band of male and female thieves who continued its operations to the large hotels. Her husband she discovered months before was a member of such a gang, and then determined to take the first opportunity to notify the police. The officers listened in astonishment while she told the details of her story. She then uncovered a pile of goods in a corner of the room. There were fine camels hair blankets, costly linen shirts, empty purses, sealskin caps, heavy overcoats, bedspreads, fine soaps, vases, etc. The officers were convinced and Monday night arrested Frank Emmitt, a trusted watchman, at the Sherman house, together with James Boykin and Patrick Needham and several other men and women who are supposed to be implicated. Several of the other big hotels have been systematically robbed by certain of their employees, and the police have secured several wagon loads of goods taken from the hotels. The woman who gave the first information to the police, was asked why she gave her name as Mrs. James Murray, and told the following story of her life which there is every reason to believe is true: "My maiden name was Lizzie Josephine Kerns. My father was John Kerns, who many years before my birth was lord mayor of Dublin city. I was born and lived there until I was sent away to be educated. Father was wealthy and we were a happy family. There were six sisters of us and I was the beauty and most spirited. On my return home, I met and married James Murray, then a wealthy boot and shoe manufacturer. We never lived happily together. We came to this country and while in New York I left my husband who began suit for divorce on the ground of desertion. A bill was granted him. I was without friends and with but little money, and was compelled to seek a cheap boarding house. Until I moved to Chicago I believed my husband to have been strictly honest." The officers who have investigated the matter are convinced of the truth of Mrs. Murray's story.

The Tariff and Revenue Bill.
WASHINGTON, March 14. The ways and means committee to-day began the formation of Mills' tariff and revenue bill, the entire document being read to the committee by the clerks. No amendments were offered for the reason they will not be in order until the consideration of the bill by paragraphs, which will begin tomorrow, and be continued from day to day until completed. After the adjournment, but while most of the members were still present, there was a sharp tilt between Messrs. Scott and Read. Mr. Scott emphatically expressed his opinion to the effect that tariff protection and stimulated trusts and called special attention to the alleged steel trust as a case in point. He said he had collected many facts that would enlighten the public on the subject. Mr. Read retorted by advising Mr. Scott as a tried not to go into the subject. He challenged him to produce his facts, and sarcastically observed that they were like goods put up in tin cans intended for immediate consumption, as they would show up on exposure.
